EDITOR'S NOTE

Without continual growth and progress, such words as improvement, achievement and success hold no meaning, and with that in mind, this year has seen the birth of various new committees and initiatives. These have no doubt helped the students embrace their culture and nurture their talents.

The sole motivation behind Pulse is to bring to attention everything that is happening around us, whether it is within our college or outside. With this edition we have put out our views on certain issues that we believe are impacting our society.

PULSE PERSPECTIVE

Keep Cool and Fight Global Warming

I remember reading a book by the UNHRC which said, the hotter the place the angrier the people there are. It said that people living near the equators hence are more prone to losing their temper, while people living in cooler places are calmer (for example Canadians are known to be the nicest people who never lose their temper no matter what).

Considering the fact that temperatures are rising consistently in the world currently, it's no surprise that our temperaments are not in check either.

Even with the increasing talks of the importance of inclusivity and equality, we are constantly witnessing a huge rise in hate crimes, communalism, casteism, etc. People take offence at the slightest of jokes.

Humanity is at a greater risk than it ever has been before.

Meanwhile, global warming is slowly but surely making its presence felt all over the world. In India itself we're witnessing simultaneous flooding and droughts in different parts of our country. There are predictions that by 2050 we will have no clean drinking water at our disposal. No doubt there is a rising Aware mess about this and that we try to make a conscious effort at doing what we can. But frankly speaking it's not enough. At this rate, we as the common population, as well as the world leaders will have to begin taking much greater efforts and make bigger sacrifices if we have to reverse the damage already done.

Think of it as a win win situation. The faster we counter global warming and climate change, the lesser the hatred among people. And ultimately, it is us who will have a better world to live in.

PULSE PERSPECTIVE

Teacher's Point of View

The Way Forward: Student Participation in Public affairs can enrich our lives.

We are living in the information age. Social media using digital Networks have become intrinsic part of our lives. We watch young people especially students immersed in their mobile phones. The real lives of people and their virtual lives mingle and become indistinguishable at times. The aim before us is to separate our real and virtual lives.

We must not allow technology to take over our lives. Over the past few years, I have noticed my students become increasingly unaware of political and economic events taking place in our society. In the age of Globalization modern lives have become increasingly materialistic. The excessive emphasis on consumption of products leads to decline of core human values. We do not exhibit any concern for our fellow human beings.

How can we bring about an attitudinal change in the present generation of youngsters? Virtual technology including internet and social media must be used for the benefit of the less privileged in our society.

I will use this platform of the e-newsletter to call upon students of our college to become aware of their political, economic and social environment. We may hate politics but we cannot escape politics. Politics determines many aspects of our lives including the syllabus we study, the taxes we pay, the transportation we use and even the culture we follow. Students must take keen interest in the socio-political events in our country and become informed citizens. They must exercise their franchise and go out to vote in coming General and state elections in 2019. They must make informed choices and be better citizens.

Let us use social media to change our society.
